9:00 Keynote Address – Achieving Success – Andrew Scrimgeour Uni SA

It is often said that languages are failing to achieve the levels of success that policy makers would hope for - especially when data on year 12 enrolments is one of the few reference points available, and where curriculum standards are higher than what is deemed possible in the time allocated to language learning. If these 'external forces' are hindering our sense of success, what can we do to realign our work, and establish realistic expectations of what learners will achieve and why these matter - in the years in which they do engage in language learning?
